Dear Friends,

Granny Jordan was a precious lady and all who knew her consider themselves blessed. When she passed away Christy Jordan, her granddaughter and Southern Plate's founder discovered that Granny Jordan had left her yet another treasure in her recipe collection. Hundreds of clipped recipe cards, along with some written in her own hand, carefully filed, with notes on each one denoting when the recipe was made and who it was served to. Going through them brought back a flood of memories for the family.

"Granny said she always made this on Thanksgiving. Oh! I remember that! It was so good! I need to copy that recipe!"

Those files were combed through one by one and nearly forgotten memories were recovered. Now the information could be passed down to future generations. Nowadays, we aren't really clipping recipes from newspapers and magazines like we used to, but printing them off of the internet instead. This is why I'm so excited to bring you this printable recipe binder set.

In the tradition of all mothers and grandmothers, this is the perfect place to store your treasured recipes, new favorites, and ones you want to try. I want to encourage you to make notes on the pages, perhaps even like Granny Jordan did, with the date you made each one and who you made it for.

If a recipe is someone's favorite, make sure and note that, too! Make something for a family member's birthday? Write down the date and occasion. And don't fret over a milk splatter or flour dusting because that just gives the page more character. Years from now you and your family will look back on these pages and see a lifetime of memories - and blessings.

This set is going to help you fill a binder with recipes printed on paper, but the memories printed on your heart each time you reach for it will last for generations.

It will begin as a recipe book but you will make it an heirloom.

Because the truth of the matter is, cooking is an act of love and the most important part of the dinner table is the people around it. May the recipes you put in this binder bring 'em home again and again.

Gratefully,

Stacey Lynn
